Loa Country Club

Loa Country Club has one of the oldest golf infrastructures in Laos but yet it is always kept in optimal playing conditions. The Course in Lao Country Club is always kept in tip top condition as it is always professionally and carefully maintained. The fairways are quite gentle, making it easy to walk the whole course, with slight elevation change from the highest to the lowest ground on the property. One can easily find water on this course. The water bodies create an interesting distraction which may steal your concentration and cause your shots to be wayward.

Get a hint of what is coming your way when you embark on the first hole where decorative water surrounds the tee boxes on the left and right sides with water flowing almost 349 yards from the black tee to the green. The 75 yards to the greens have water on its right side which aims to punish wayward shots. The first hole is only the beginning. It is a great beginning as it has allowed you to experience the style of the course without having a water body in the way.

Some Tee offs have water bodies directly in front of them but these water bodies are meant to decorate, beautify and add psychological barriers rather than being strategically placed because the distance to overcome the water hazards are relatively short. The fairways are usually quite wide and bunkers are well positioned in the landing areas. The greens are well trimmed and mowed which gives your ball a good speed with no encroaching foreign grasses prevalent.
